PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 22.

TRANSLATIONS

From late French Papers, received at the office of the Philadelphia Register, by the ship Portland, captain Wills, from L'Orient.

The Russian Secretary of Legation at Berlin, left that city, as a Courier, for Petersburgh, on the 1st of October.

The Russians have obtained decisive advantages in Grussinie, (Georgi) over the Persians, whom they have pursued beyond Erivan, the capital of Persian-Armenia.

The Paris Courier of the 18th of October states that the Hanoverian Legion of 1,500 men, was marching by companies, and disarmed, to the frontiers of Holland.

The Episcopal Palace in the Island of Corsa, was preparing for the reception of the King of Sardinia.

13,000 Russians had arrived in the Republic of the Seven Islands, and 15,000 more expected. Another account says that the King of Sardinia would repair to Cagliari, and that Malta would be garrisoned by the English and Russians.

The departure of the French and Russian Charges d' Affaires from their respective residences, had produced a fall in the public funds of both nations.

20,000 French troops had marched from Upper Italy towards Naples, to reinforce the army of Gen. St. Cyr.

The Emperor of France arrived at St. Cloud from Mentz on the 11th of October.

It was believed that the question of additional indemnities to several of the German Electors, had been agitated and agreed on during the Emperor's stay at Mentz, particularly in favor of Bavaria.

It is said that a disposition prevails in the Court of Spain to raise the reigning family to the Imperial dignity.

The fall of the funds in Holland has been attributed to the projected change in the government of that republic.

M. de Champagny, ambassador from France to the Emperor of Germany, has returned from Vienna to Paris, being appointed Minister of the Interior of the Empire.

It was supposed at Vienna that Mr. Otto, Minister from France to the Court of Munich, would provisionally exercise the functions of minister plenipotentiary from France at the court of Vienna.

The Emperor of Austria has prohibited the exportation of grain from his dominions.

A serious insurrection had taken place in the Island of Majorca, occasioned by an order of the Spanish government to lay a duty on brandy.

Three regiments, that fired on the mob, were roughly handled.

The regiment of Bourbon had been cut to pieces.

The Emperor of Russia, to encourage the manufactures of his empire, has prohibited, by an ukase, the importation by land from the Baltic to the Black Sea, of every kind of cotton cloth and cambiets; and has also forbidden the introduction, by land or sea, of such articles as were liable to the taxed duties of 1797, such as printed cottons, printed cotton handkerchiefs, &c. of European or East India manufacture, with the exception of white cotton handkerchiefs.

In a late sitting of the Batavian government the project of changing the constitution of that republic was discussed, and three of the members declared against it. In a subsequent session they have been employed in completing the draught of the new constitution, and it has been proposed to abolish a number of subaltern offices, which an undue patronage had established, and the salaries of which might be saved to the state. They are now occupied in the civil arrangements; and it is supposed that the war department will be organized on the plan of the College of War at Berlin, and that the direction of it will be assigned to Gen. Dumonceau.

It is still understood that Mr. Schimelpeninck will be placed at the head of the Executive power, or that its most important duties will be confided to him. For the other branches of government (administrations) persons of established merit, probity, and principles will be selected.

From the Publiciste.

STATISTICAL ACCOUNT OF FRANCE.

France is situated in the middle of the temperate zone, between the 42 and the 51 degrees of north latitude, extending 240 leagues from east to west, and contains 32,791,263 inhabitants, making rather more than a thousand individuals to a square league.

In its civil relations it is divided into 108 Departments, 103 Prefectures, 417 Circles, and 47,468 Communes.

In its military relations it comprizes 27 divisions, commanded by 27 Generals of division.

In its ecclesiastical relations it is divided into 11 Archbishopricks, 58 Bishopricks, 4,608 Curacies, 31,800 Subcuracies, and 80 Confestorial or reformed Churches.

The War Establishment of the Army is 554,407 men—viz.

Infantry of the Line	341,411
Light infantry	100,130
Cavalry of the Line	14,120
Light Cavalry	68,988
Artillery on foot	20,656
Horse artillery	3,229
Sappers, Miners, and Engineers	5,873
	554,407

The conscription alone presents a mass of near one million of soldiers. Mr. Jaru has observed in a work on the recruiting service that France on a great emergency might select her defenders from six millions of men able to carry arms.

Her marine power is far inferior to what it was in the reign of Louis the Fourteenth, or to what it may yet become under Bonaparte. A navy is not formed with the same promptitude that an army is raised; but France possesses the men, the ship builders, the instruments, the energy, and above all the powerful genius to carry every thing into operation, and complete it with exactness. Hence it may, without presumption be believed that her marine will rival her army.

The nett amount of the revenues of France was in the year 11, 589,500,000 Francs, (about 111 millions of dollars.) Her public debt was one milliard, 260,000,000 francs the annual interest of which is 84 millions.

December 27.

The ship Portland, captain Wills, arrived at Reedy-Island from L'Orient. Capt. W. sailed from hence the 24th October, and informs, that the ship Thomas, from New-York, with gen. Armstrong, ambassador from the United States, had arrived at Nantz, that a few days before he left L'Orient two Spanish ships loaded with linens, from St. Maloes to Spain, were captured by a British frigate. When capt. W. arrived at L'Orient, upwards of 60 sail of gun-brigs, pinnaces, &c. lay there: on his departure not more than ten remained and they dismantled. About 25 had been recently captured and destroyed on their passage since to Brest, by two British frigates. The crews of the gun boats in general are very sickly, owing to the want of accommodation under deck. A fine ship to carry 90 guns, was launched there during his stay, and three others in forwardness on the stocks, but no seamen to man them. War with Russia was strongly talked of in those circles where liberty of speech was exercised, and the long contemplated invasion of England generally seoued. Provisions plenty and cheap, but the once flourishing port of L'Orient was totally bereft of its trade, and the merchants' extensive stores occupied by the government.

NORFOLK, December 28.

Arrived in Hampton Roads, bound to Baltimore, the ship Hamilton, captain Vickars, seventy days from the river Janeiral. Left there the ships General Mercer, Millar, and Friendship, Stoddart, for Baltimore in a few days; Nancy, Hobbs, of Baltimore, discharging. Sailed in company with the ship George and Harriot, Allen, for Boston; and brig Polly and Nancy Groom, for Baltimore.

The sloop President, Ashton, from Antigua to Baltimore, in ballast, was cast away last Thursday night off Smith's Island.

The ship Zephry, Pearce, of Portsmouth N. H. from this port bound to Jamaica, is lost on the Grand Caicos.

☞ Th[illegible] the Co[illegible] ments of the [illegible] Patrons.

MARRIED on Sunday evening last the Rev. Mr. West, Mr. THOMAS P[illegible] TO of this town, to Miss ELEANOR [illegible] LE, late of Philadelphia.

The question of recession was yesterday taken up in the House of Representatives and after considerable debate postponed till Monday next, when it will be determined.

The house of Delegates of Virginia, on Friday the 21st ultimo, resolved, that the petition of Richard Ratcliffe, of the county of Fairfax, praying that a law may pass establishing a town on his land, be rejected.

ATTACK UPON TRIPOLI.

To learn information was yesterday received at the Navy Office in Washington of a fourth attack upon Tripoli by our squadron. The particulars had not reached when our informant left there, but were supposed to be rather unfavorable. In said three officers and forty-five men were killed, and two gun boats blown up. Lieut. Somers, midshipman Wadsworth and one other officer, with twelve men were blown up in one of the gun boats.

Copy of a circular letter from the American Consul at Amsterdam, to the Consuls and Vice Consuls of the United States, published by their desire.

AMERICAN CONSULATE,
Amsterdam, July 14.

The commerce of the United States having long suffered the weight of many impositions for the want of proper Consular agents on this coast, I have appointed Mr. Trife Christeans, at the Texel, and Messrs. A Korff and Sons, assisted by Mr. Wordell as the Heider, to whom the masters of American vessels will address themselves on arrival for such advice and aid as they may need.

Pleased to make due communication of the appointments to the captains who may clear out at your office for this port, giving them at the same time the address of Messrs. Haines & Co. American shipbrokers lately established in this city, under my protection, in order to break up the monopoly of that business, which has proved very injurious to the American trade in many points of view.

Your attention hereto will essentially serve the commercial interests of our country and

(Signed) S. BOURNE,
Consul of the United States at Amsterdam.

Extract of a letter from Barbadoes, to a respectable mercantile house in Boston, dated October 30, 1804.

"Agreeable to your request, I now forward you our prices; together with the new arrangement made, prohibiting the further importation of salted provisions, fish of all kinds, soap, candles butter, lard, &c. by an order which the governor has just received from the earl of Camden, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state dated 5th Sept. 1804, whereof the following is an extract:"

"I am to instruct you not to open the port of the island over which you preside, for the admission of articles from the American states, which are not allowed to be imported by law (except in cases of real and very great necessity) and not to fail in advising me, in every instance, wherein you shall so do, and to state, at the same time, the reason which induced you to adopt the measure."

In consequence of which the governor has issued his proclamation, allowing the following articles to be imported, and no others:—scantling, boards, plank, & squared timber, hoops, staves, and heading, shingles, horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, and poultry of all sorts, bread, biscuit, flour, pease, beans, potatoes, wheat, rice, oats, hay, and grain of all sorts; to be in force for one year.

Under these circumstances, I would recommend your shipping any other articles than those mentioned, for the same instructions have gone to all the governors of the different British colonies, and have extended even to Surrinam and Demerara. Extract of a letter from Washington received at Philadelphia, dated Dec. 1.

"Wednesday the second of January next, is the day appointed for the appearance of Judge Chase, to answer the articles of impeachment prefered against him by the House of Representatives; but it is understood that further time will be allowed him, if requested, to procure his testimony and prepare his defence. As some of the witnesses that will probably be summoned, reside in Richmond, and others in Delaware and Philadelphia, the trial may not come on until about the last of January. Very commodious and elegant arrangements are now making in the senate chamber preparatory to this great occasion.—The Senate organized as a court will be seated on the right and left of the Vice President; the members of the House of Representatives will take the seats now occupied by the Senate; the judge and the managers will have places assigned them in the centre of the Chamber between the court and the House of Representatives. An additional gallery, that will afford the best and most convenient seats in the House, is now erecting for the separate accommodation of Ladies; the lobby of the Senate; and the old gallery for strangers generally.

A Receipe for the cure of the PALSY.

Take the wigs of Sweet wood, which grows in wet ground, or greens, is very brittle, breaks short, and is a yellowish cast, smells sweet; in some states it is called Citron wood, bearing a ball or burr. Put the branches into a brass kettle, and boil a strong decoction, and pour it into a tub, cover yourself with a blanket, till you feel warm, dip a coarse cloth in the tub as hot as can be borne, rub the part affected ten or fifteen minutes, and go to bed. This method being pursued once or six weeks night and morning, has been known to produce great cures. The decoction may be used repeatedly, by boiling it when wanted.

THE LAY CURATE.

DISCOURSE V.

Great Mary—who bestowed much labour among us.

The Apostle of the Gentiles to the christian brethren at Rome, chooses to convey his sense of the merits of a young female proselyte in the above words; which although not expressed according to our modern Gallick or English idiom, will be found to import as much as the most formal assurances of 'high consideration.'

The reader is naturally prepared to enquire, who was this female for whom the apostle intends such flattering acknowledgment? This, however, not being directly declared, remains a subject of conjecture; and the context and concomitant history must serve as data for the essay.

It is most improbable that she was a Greek; for she is mentioned in immediate connexion with Epenetus, who is declared to be the first fruit of Apostleship in Acha.—She may have been an Asiatick of the city of Ephesus; because Aquila and Priscilla, who are also here mentioned, has resided in that city about three years, and had now returned to Rome after the death of Claudius, or the abrogation of his decree which first occasioned their removal to Corinth; and it is likely that Mary may have accompanied them to Italy. That she was not a Roman we may infer, not only from her name, but from this circumstance, that the Apostle had not yet been at that capital at the date of this letter. He had addressed his brethren at Rome from Corinth the second time he visited Greece: but subsequent to this was his accusation before Felix; his trial before Festus; his appeal to and appearance before Cæsar.

To whatever country Mary may have belonged is not very material. She was now at Rome; and her memory by this greeting of the Apostle, transmitted to succeeding ages with such peculiar distinction, and such a strong mark of approbation, that her name might be the pride, as her virtues ought to excite the imitation of the best of her sex, of every country.

It is with a purpose to bring into view some domestic female virtues, that the Lay-Curate has chosen this Apostolical greeting as his text. He would recommend to his fair countrywomen the conduct and character of individuals of their own sex, whose acts and habits of social life are recorded as examples, not only of the purity of the christian character, but for the observance of the cardinal virtues, and the fulfilment of those duties peculiarly assigned to their station.

It is pleasing, it is gratifying, and instructive, to imagine the exemplification of the cardinal and domestic virtues, in the history of the wife of Aquila! Not only does Priscilla receive tokens of the Apostle's gratitude and acknowledgements every time her husband is mentioned, but she is particularly distinguished as his helper in his great work. Fervid and active benevolence was, from the first, conspicuous towards Paul in Corinth; they not only made him one of their family for eighteen months, while he co-operated with them in the secular employment of tent-making, but also, as would appear from his own account, saved his life on some occasion at the hazard of their own. Their liberal beneficence must also have been conspicuous, for he says "they deserve the thanks of all the churches of the gentiles."

How easy is it to suppose that this worthy family took an earnest part, while at Corinth, in promoting the contributions that were made for the support of the poor brethren at Jerusalem and elsewhere. For frequent mention is made of the liberality of the churches of Achaia in this respect. In all these virtuous and praise-worthy actions Priscilla bore not a passive but an active part. In all their peregrinations the benediction of the apostle follows her and her husband. After their sojourn at Ephesus, whither they had accompanied him, they return to Rome, and receive the greeting in the context; and again, when, after some years, they return to Ephesus, Timothy, who was a bishop or Presbyter of that church, is requested to deliver to them the salutations of Paul.

Among the female christians of that time, the bearer of this epistle to Rome deserves not to be overlooked. Phebe seems to have been a Deaconess of the church of Cinchrea, which was a small maritime town near Corinth. That she had been conspicuous for good qualities is manifest, not only from her being selected as the bearer of this important trust, but also from the strong recommendation given of her by Paul, and the reasons subjoined, "for, says he, she hath been a succor of more than of myself."

Of what particular kinds were the virtues of Mary and Phebe, or in what manner they were made serviceable, we are not told; but it may easily be discovered that they were not ascetick; neither those of the blind devotee nor of the starched prude, but such as become every human being, and are peculiarly ornamental to the woman, those of efficient benevolence, and domestic usefulness.

If his fair readers are now preparing to exclaim—what is the object of all this research, and where is the benefit we are to derive from those historical conjectures? Is not the exordium already of such length, that there is not room for much doctrine in the discourse? If such be their disposition of mind, the Curate can only recommend to them the exercise of one of their virtues, patience!—He has not unwittingly deviated from the accustomed form of didactick instruction. If he can, before he closes, place one or two useful truths in a favourable point of view, he will hope to be excused for his circumlocution.

He would, then, wish to recall to the minds of his female friends, the consideration of the part they have to act, and the duties they have to perform in life; and to discover whether they are not of those kinds which have here received Apostolical approbation.

Virtue is immutable. That which was in itself excellent eighteen centuries ago, to-day is the same. The degree of delicacy which has been, by the progress of learning and refinement, superinduced upon female manners, in latter ages, is not always favourable to moral habits. Though tenderness, timidity, and nicity of feeling, be in their nature amiable, and though the exhibition of them, may frequently conduce to the excitement of that sympathy which constitutes one of the best blessings of our sex, yet how often do they lead to excess in their indulgence, or are overrated in the power attributed to them. Whenever they are calculated upon as charms to attract, or qualities to inspire regard, they cease to be auxiliars to virtue. An affectation of shrinking timidity of heart, and overweaning delicacy of sentiment, may soon be converted into reality. All know the effect this reality has upon the nerves; and from the close connection between the physical and moral faculties, the mind soon becomes unfit for the discharge of any positive duty.

That this affection is encouraged beyond any reasonable ground in modern education, is daily seen by those who are accustomed to enquire into the cause of what they behold. The occasions of alarm and suffering which unavoidably occur in families, and require the exertion of great patience, and fortitude, are sufficient to convince us that woman is not naturally weak in constitution and temper. Indeed were it so, we should be compelled to conclude that the Creator had not adapted the means to ends with that happy foresight which we every where discover in his plans.

Without regarding the notions of Mrs. Wolestonecraft on the abstract rights of women, the Lay-Curate is decidedly of the opinion of those who would rather form the sexes, to a resemblance of character, than contrast them with each other. Virtue, wisdom, and presence of mind, capacity, application, are not sexual qualities: they belong to mankind; to all who have duties to perform and evils to endure.

Female duties and destination are distinctly comprehended in the original mandate of divine appointment:—"And he said it is not good for man to be alone; I will make him an help meet for him." This not only points out marriage as the destination of women, but also the character they are to sustain in that relation; a companion and an helper. Any elucidation of those exercises whereby the wife realizes the helpmate is unnecessary: they are particularly understood. The Lay-Curate however would exhort his young countrymen, not to under-value the knowledge which will best enable them to discharge those functions. They will not be rendered less amiable by possessing such information.

A justly celebrated writer [Dr. Aikin] after having observed that the arts of housewifery should be regarded as professional by the woman who intends to become a wife, thus happily adds —'and to select one for that station who is destitute of them, or destined to exercise them, however otherwise accomplished, is as absurd as it would be to choose for your lawyer or physician a man who excels in every thing rather than in law or physick.'

The Lay Curate thinks it an easy matter for his country women to convert their virtues into valuable substitutes for fashionable extrensic embellishments, the langour of sensibility, and the refined arts of coquetry. The cares and the pleasures of life equally require an union of the sexes; but the happiness of a husband does not require those foreign aids; or rather it is not to be secured by such alone. That union whose basis is esteem, and whose cement is respect, must surely be the strongest and most pleasureable.

That the women of his country may excel in those qualities which truly are estimable, and are peculiarly adapted to the parts they have to act; that in the discharge of their religious, relative, and personal duties, 'they may secure an approbation which is superior even to that of an Apostle;' and that in conjunction with their duty to God, they may display the valuable domestic virtues of Mary and of Phebe, with the charitable dispositions & active benevolence of the wife of Aquila; are the greatest blessings that can be asked for, in their behalf, by

A LAY-CURATE.

Stop the Runaway.

A young Negro Woman, named HANNAH, stout and strong, who has lived with a respectable farmer about two years past. She was directed to return home on Christmas day, as I am informed. She had on and took with her a green jacket and petticoat, made of half thick or kersey cloth, two pair of shoes and stockings, coarse hat, a green grounded calico habit, a white cotton petticoat and spotted jacket, &c. She is capable of great deception;—sometimes she appears to be passive and has but little to say when it is to answer her purpose, but at other times extremely impudent. Whoever takes up said Negro and brings her home if five miles from home shall receive Five Dollars; if ten miles, Ten Dollars; and, if a greater distance, and secured in any jail so that I get her again, Ten Dollars will be paid.

It will be executed (by a proceſs lately diſcovered) ſo as to reſiſt the injury of time for ages. It will be as clear and hard as glaſs, without any danger of being broken; and it will be handſomely framed.

RAN AWAY,

From the ſubſcriber, the 5th June, a bright mulatto boy named BEN, near fifteen years old; he has run off heretofore, and paſſed as free by the name of John M'Daniel, has a remarkable ſhort thick foot, and ſeveral ſcars on his body, occaſioned by a burn; long viſage, yellow eyes, his wool ſhows the negro very much, which is of a roſty colour.

Alſo ran away from the ſubſcriber the 17th July, a likely black fellow named JOHN. I expect he will add Madiſon to his name, as I purchaſed him from the eſtate of Ambroſe Madiſon, of Orange County, Virginia, and frequently made uſe of that name; thirty four or five years old, about five feet 7 or 8 inches high, long viſage, well made and ſtoops a little in his walk, as if cramped in his feet, fond of liquor, and has a variety of clothes. He is a good barber, Shoemaker, and has ſome tools with him, and a pair of half boots, which he wears with ſhanks; walks with a pewter headed walking ſtick, often has his wool platted in ſmall plaits about his head, he is an extraordinary good waggoner. He ran off in company with a likely young fellow of a yellow colour, belonging to Mr. Benjamin Pritchett, with a ſcar acroſs his lip. I will give thirty dollars reward for apprehending either of the aforeſaid negroes, and delivering them to me in Stafford county, twelve miles above Dumfries.
